

James Reddin

Prior to joining UPEI James has worked in the community college system in BC, as a therapist with public mental health, and as a marriage and family therapist with a community-based non-profit organization.

Working within the structure of the university, he has been involved in successful initiative to partner with provincial psychiatric services, develop mentorship and support opportunities for international students, and increase collaboration between counselling services and other departments. James has served on the executive of the Atlantic Association of College and University Student Services (AACUSS), the College and Institute Counsellors Association (CICA has since been renamed the BC Post Secondary Counsellors Association), and the Fort Nelson Family Development Society.
